"C'MON, GET HAPPY: THE REPRESENTATION AND COMMODIFICATION OF LINGUISTIC RACIAL STEREOTYPES IN A VW SUPERBOWL COMMERCIAL, NOVEMBER 28, 2016
This presentation examines a national Volkswagen commercial, broadcast on American television during the 2013 Super Bowl, and the intense public debate that met it. It shows a cheerful European American owner of a 2013 Volkswagen Beetle, who despite being from Minnesota speaks in a Jamaican Creole accent with features of Rastafarian speech (Pollard 2000). The incongruity on which the ad’s humor is based works at the levels of both culture and of expectations about the co-occurrence of race and linguistic form.

The focus of analysis is the linguistic performance of the Jamaican Creole as well as the linguistic reception by American and Jamaican audience members. The linguistic analysis reveals that the primary objective in how the character uses forms of Jamaican Creole is not linguistic authenticity, but simply to index Jamaican culture and identity through selective feature use. The discourse analysis of the ad’s reception shows that linguistic ideologies, including ideas about what constitutes linguistic racism, vary widely among American viewers and is generally divided along racial lines.

Events Outside SDSU

The Media Arts Center San Diego’s Digital Gym Cinema will be screening the Argentinian film 'Cien Años de Perdón.' The film is about six armed men that attack a bank in Valencia. The gang has a seemingly cut-and-dry mission: to clear out the safe deposit boxes possible and then escape through a tunnel that was dug out in one of the bank’s offices. But this is a day when nothing goes as planned as their escape route becomes flooded and the band of thieves discover a secret far more important than any money or jewels hidden in the bank vaults.

CALL FOR PAPERS: HISTORIC REBELS OF THE MEXICAN IMAGINATION, DUE DECEMBER 1, 2016
This special edition of the Hispanic Journal intends to study the figure of the rebel or revolutionary in the Mexican imagination, a historical character that has existed from pre-Colombian times until today. Those interested should write a proposal about 500 words long and explain the figure in question with a critical focus. This proposal should explain the figure chosen and contain initial analysis of the topic, as well as a bibliography of the essential secondary sources of the project. The proposal can be written in Spanish or English.

Proposal are due December 1, 2016 and if accepted will appear in the May 1, 2017 issue. More information and the proposal format can be found at the Hispanic Journal website http://www.chss.iup.edu/spanish/hj/

LACS GRADUATE STUDENT CONFERENCE: CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS, DUE DECEMBER 15, 2016

Conference Theme: Creative Revolution(s): Combating Hatred with Justice Across the Americas

All around us we are plagued by episodes of extreme violence and insane bigotry that are very disheartening. We bear witness to attacks on marginalized identities in different contexts and circumstances that compel us to face our demons and confront the structural injustices that fuel such attacks. For this conference we hope to develop dialogue(s) for understanding and tackling violence across the Americas from anti-Haitian sentiment in the Dominican Republic, to the disappearance of students at Ayotzinapa, to attacks on Latinx immigrants in the U.S., and anything in between.

- Some questions or issues we hope to touch upon in these dialogues include but is not limited to:
  - What types of logics and sentiments are at the core of modern bigotry and hatred?
  - What strategies have people developed to cope with and/or combat the violence of structural inequalities?
  - What are the institutions and power systems propagating discourses of exclusion and hatred?
- How do struggles against marginalization in Latin America and the Caribbean inform and support similar struggles in the United States and vice versa?
- How does a historical analysis of colonialism, imperialism, and neoliberalism assist in challenging those very processes?
- How can the arts or more creative academic endeavors contribute to advancing ideals of inclusion and decolonization?

We invite all types of presentation formats including: panels, paper presentations, workshops, plenary, think tanks, posters, performances, art exhibitions, and other formats. Please email 250-500 word abstract to lacsgradstudents@gmail.com. Please refer to our website lacsgradstudents.wordpress.com for more info. Conference Submissions Deadline: December 15, 2016

Conference will be held by:
Department of Latin American, Caribbean, and U.S. Latino Studies at University at Albany-SUNY, March 3-4, 2017
