Events Outside SDSU

Rodrigo Escribano Roca is a PhD Student at the Research University Institute of Latin American Studies of the University of Alcalá, Spain (IELAT-UAH). He is currently a Visiting Graduate Student in CILAS, UCSD where he is conducting research for his dissertation.

This research is about the representations of the American colonial world in the historical thought of Spain and Great Britain. I focus my comparative and long-term analysis on the imperial and national discourses produced by British and Spanish historians during the decades between the “age of imperialism” and the twenty first century (1870-2012). I provide an overview of this discursive and symbolic production process in which different generations of intellectuals established a dialogue with the testimonies of the European imperial past in America in order to produce a wide range of concepts, theories, and narratives that are intimately related with competing colonial and national political projects. The historical imaginaries they helped create have had an important influence in the relations of these two former metropoles with the American Republics. My main sources are the history books, articles and oral discourses produced by a selected canon of authors that represent the main paradigms that influenced the historiographies of both metropoles since the nineteenth century.

10th ANNUAL FANDANGO FRONTERIZO: BINATIONAL MUSIC FESTIVAL AT THE BORDER, MAY 27, 2017

The Fandango Fronterizo is an annual event where musicians from both sides of the U.S./Mexico border gather to celebrate, share, learn, and grow together as we play Son Jarocho, a rural string music from the southern state of Veracruz. They perform at Friendship Park/Playas lighthouse, where the U.S.-Mexico border fence meets the Pacific Ocean.

The border fandango is a symbolic event. We are trying to show how music can build community, even when communities are separated. Son Jarocho is the perfect music for that, because it is all about being together with friends. The community of friends who play Son Jarocho is growing in both Mexico and the U.S., and the Fandango Fronterizo reminds us that we are one community despite the barriers that divide us.

Friendship Park, along the border fence from 11 am to 2 pm.

BEYOND BORDERS AND WALLS: AN ARTIST, ACTIVIST AND SCHOLAR SYMPOSIUM, MAY 27, 2017

This public symposium explores the impact of border walls and restrictions on mobility for communities, societies, and the environment. It features panel discussions with leading border studies scholars and local community organizations, and ends with a closing reception for the acclaimed photography exhibition, Up Against the Wall (which starts on May 6). The symposium will be hosted in Balboa Park at the Centro Cultural de la Raza, and will follow the binational music festival, Fandango Fronterizo, held that morning on both sides of Friendship Park.

Speakers include:
Tom Wong (Political Science, UCSD), S. Deborah Kang (History, CSUSM)
Jane Lilly Lopez (Sociology, UCSD), Ricardo Dominguez (Art, UCSD)

SAN DIEGO WILL BE HOSTING FOUR LATIN AMERICAN AND CARIBBEAN SOCCER TEAMS IN THE CONCACAF GOLD CUP GAMES, JULY 9, 2017

On Sunday, July 9th, San Diego will host the CONCACAF Gold Cup™ Group C's opening round double-header at Qualcomm Stadium.

Mexico vs. El Salvador:
With a history dating back to 1935, Mexico and El Salvador have one of Central America's most storied rivalries in the region. However, after meeting and facing defeat against Mexico twice in Gold Cup history, in 2002 and 2011, El Salvador will look to their rejuvenated team and experienced coach to get Gold Cup revenge on their opponents, in what would be a stunning upset.

Curacao vs. Jamaica:
The Caribbean nation of Curacao, in its first-ever Gold Cup appearance, will open the San Diego doubleheader against 2015 Gold Cup finalist Jamaica, in what will be a historic match-up between two Caribbean teams that will showcase the spirit of the countries and the passion for the game in the region.
SALSA AND BACHATA CLASSES ON SUNDAYS AT QUEEN BEE'S IN NORTH PARK, EVERY SUNDAY

Salsa and Bachata (a Dominican dance style) lessons every Sunday night at 7:30 are followed by a DJ'd session that lasts until midnight; $10 with or without the lesson, $8 for students. Sunday salsa night and the front room is fast-paced salsa where you will see women being original and sexy, high energy and safe at the same time, all dancing salsa. In the back room, there’s slower-paced sexy bachata for all you cortavenas Latin lovers.

CALL FOR PAPERS: THE FUTURE OF FOOD STUDIES GRADUATE CONFERENCE, DUE JUNE 15, 2017

The Graduate Association for Food Studies is pleased to announce the second annual Future of Food Studies graduate student conference, to be held 19-21 October 2017, at Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri. The keynote speaker will be Professor Krishnendu Ray, acclaimed food studies scholar and chair of the Food Studies department at New York University. Additionally, a select number of student papers presented at the conference will be considered for publication in the Graduate Journal of Food Studies, an open-source, peer-reviewed graduate journal that publishes food-related research.

This conference seeks graduate scholarship that presents original approaches to food studies, whether applying creative theories and methods to established questions or subjects, or interrogating unconsidered topics in novel ways. As a fundamentally interdisciplinary subject of study, we welcome papers from the fields of anthropology, history, sociology, English cultural studies, american studies, gender studies, economics, art, politics, pedagogy, nutrition, philosophy, and religion, as well as other disciplines. We expect to assemble graduate students from an array of disciplines and a broad geographic expanse.
